More than half of [1] greenhouse gas emissions come from transport. Alexandre Turquia, a sales manager at a hotel group, drives to work in the capital[2] from a neighbouring village. The trip should take 30 minutes, but traffic means it can last an hour. Still, he says his car is the best option. "If it's a day where I need to visit customers that are far away, I will take my car for sure," he said. But Mia Mayer, an employee at Amazon, has already switched from driving to work to taking the bus to save time and money. "I had the experience on an almost daily basis of trying to get through the city center, getting really stuck in traffic and sometimes taking 45-50 minutes.[2] is not a huge place so that really is a long driving time," she said. To cope with the many commuters, [1] plans to invest 3.9 billion euros in railways from 2018- 28, upgrade the bus network and add more park-and- ride sites on the border. Despite these investments, the government expects 65% of commuters to still get to work by car in 2025, down from 73% in 2017.[1] is the first country to roll out free transport, but some cities, including Estonian capital Tallinn, have also experimented with the idea.

.....[1] 94, one of India's most well known artists, passed away recently. A [2] awardee(second- highest civilian award), his work spanned the medium: he was a muralist, a painter, an architect, a designer, and a poetry lover. From making the alphabet mural that adorns the facade of the Delhi high court to designing the Belgian Embassy in the national Capital, his's catholic sensibility to what constitutes art was inculcated at an early age. Born in Lahore in 1925, he witnessed the misery and horror of Partition. Soon afterwards, he moved to Simla, where he immersed himself in painting "man's cruelty to man", as he put it in a 2016 interview. Some of his most famous paintings express this anguish, including Days of Glory and Mourning en mass. A poetry lover, [1] often said that his love for art derived from the words of poets like Faiz Ahmed Faiz and Ghalib. He would also accompany older brother[3], then a student of Lahore college, to poetry reading sessions. His brother, the late [3] went on to become the Prime Minister of India. In the 1950s, he apprenticed with David Siqueiros and Diego Rivera (the great Mexican artist Frida Kahlo's husband), and inspired by them, he turned to making murals in ceramic and terracotta. Art critic and curator Ranjit Hoskote said, "I always admired... [1] for the wide range of his practice, which embraced painting, sculpture and architecture. He was boldly experimental in his approach to materials like burnt wood, and took on a variety of scales, from the art object to the building. He was an heir to the Mexican muralists whose student he had been in the early 1950s, Diego Rivera and David Sequeiros. And he was a pioneering Indian modernist. We will miss him." He is survived by his wife, Kiran, son, Mohit, daughter- in-law Feroze, and grandchildren.
